ENTREPRENEUR CREATES ONLINE NETWORK FOR AIRLINE PROFESSIONALS

*Hartford, Connecticut—February 14, 2009—*Aerhub.com, a Hartford-based internet start-up, is an online social network that appeals to airline professionals that are looking for a community all their own. This website allows you to meet friends, view and post jobs, and even get the latest information in airline news.

This young and energetic website combines the ever so popular social web with the tight bonded niche of the aviation world. With features such as live chat, discussion forums, blogs, video uploads, daily news, groups, events, classifieds, and most importantly an individualized profile for each Aerhub user, this website community has many elements that appeal to web socialites.

In addition, this website has one specific perk that is revolutionary in the making. Aerhub plans to connect with airlines to make it possible for all members to fly at a reduced rate or even free of charge. Individuals qualified for this feature will be customer service agents, ground ops, airport security, TSA agents, or any other airline personnel who registers with Aerhub.com. Flight Attendants can also use their Aerhub club card to receive a bump up on their flight's standby list if traveling non-rev.

The founder and CEO of Aerhub.com is entrepreneur Wilkinson Egwu. Wilkinson knows all too well the kinship of the airline industry. His aviation profile includes being a Customer Service Representative for America West Airlines, being an Airport Operations Instructor for Jetblue Airways, and also being the In-Flight Base Manager for Primaris Airlines. Six months ago, Mr. Egwu began actively searching for an online community that fulfilled all aviation needs in one. When he came up empty handed, he decided there would be no better way to fill this need than to create it himself, and thus was born aerhub.com.
