

East Hartford, CT, April 10, 2010 ---- Aerhub.com was created in February 2009 as an online social network that appealed to aviation professionals looking for a community all their own. Offering features such as creating a profile, establishing friends, viewing and posting jobs, browsing airline news, and even tracking live flights, the website has found much success and has fostered a large community.

In the past couple of months AerHub has been exploring possibilities of expansion and was in talks with various other aviation social networking sites. After evaluating the opportunities each site could offer AerHub users, management strategically selected PilotSpeak.net as an acquisition. PilotSpeak.net is a social aviation site geared towards pilots and FBO operators exclusively. In operation since 2007, PilotSpeak was able to build a large social community base by providing users a voice: with the ability to rate and review hotels and destinations as well as have full reign to discuss popular topics in the forum, PilotSpeak found success amongst free spirited pilots. Wilkinson Egwu, founder of AerHub.com, revealed that he is "happy about the merger because it will provide additional users to our community and further expand the site as a one stop shop for anything aviation. Also, the merger will help us utilize the experience and knowledge of the huge pilot base offered by PilotSpeak.net."

Wayne "Kila" Watts, a pilot himself, is the creator of PilotSpeak.net and expressed his feelings on the combination stating, "I am very excited about the merger of PilotSpeak.net and AerHub.com for a number of reasons. Both of our sites envisioned having a well designed, user friendly, social website for the aviation community and aviation enthusiasts. With the abilities to provide users aviation forums, picture sites, video sites, and jobsites seamlessly integrated into one website, I think that AerHub and PilotSpeak.net combining forces will magnify the opportunities provided unto users and thus inspire the entire aviation community to get on board. I am very much looking forward to working with Wilkinson and his team of professionals and to making the new AerHub.com the best aviation site on the internet." Wayne Watts will be serving AerHub.com as the new VP of Operations and Online Content.

AerHub.com continues to develop new features for the aviation minded, expand its online community, and grow the foundation of the company.
